Getting Booked

Eames Scene

One of L.A.'s most important antique and storage dealers, JF Chen, is publishing his own tome dedicated to all things Eames. In Collecting Eames: The JF Chen Collection ($65), he displays more than 300 pieces—storage units, tables, chairs and even toys—produced by Ray and Charles Eames from 1937 to 1998.

Villa-Fied

L.A.-based architect Richard Manning is one of the city's most respected designers of mega-mansions that house both classical elegance and square-footage fantasies. His first book, New Classicism: Richard Manning Architecture ($90), images, chronicles the range of his work found everywhere from Malibu and Beverly Hills to New York and Shanghai.

Roughing It

Forget that perfectly polished sheen. Rough Luxe Design ($125, Farneth Media) is a celebration of all things worn, washed, patina'd and aged. Interior designer Kahi Lee has curated the book's collection of commercial and residential projects that have elevated the look of raw imperfection to an art form.

* Moving Parts

Alison Yard, the beloved, off-Melrose collection of insider home shops, has experienced some major changes. Harbinger (752 N. La Cienega Blvd., West Hollywood, 310.858.6884, harbingerla.com), the 1,000-square-foot gem of a shop, has relocated to a space four times its size on La Cienega. Nathan Turner (8146 Melrose Ave., West Hollywood, 310.275.1205, nathanturner.com) has decamped to much bigger retail digs on Melrose Avenue, while Kathryn Ireland (636 N. Alhambra Drive, West Hollywood, 310.246.1906, kathrynireland.com) has moved from Alhambra's ritz, upstairs perch to the much larger foot building, previously occupied by Nathan Turner. (Got that?) Meanwhile, West Elm (8566 Beverly Blvd., L.A., 323.782.9672, westelm.com) is opening a mega-showroom (a 14,000-square-foot retail space) on Beverly Boulevard in the former Blueprint location.
